Main functions

Purpose of the programme and number of grants

The aim of this programme is to promote the training of researchers within the framework of the UD's doctoral programmes, through the granting aid for research work undertaken with the UD's research teams.

The 2020 call for applications provides for a maximum of 13 pre-doctoral grants. Consideration will be given to applicants' CVs, the doctoral programmes they join, the research projects proposed and suitability of these projects to the research areas of the programmes and the research plans of the teams to which they would be assigned, as well as the priorities set by the UD's research policy. The Grants provided for in the 2020 call will be distributed among: Theses with international mention or under international co-tutelle agreements: For applications that include a commitment to undertake a theses with international mention or under international co-supervision (co-tutelle) agreement, as established in RD 99/2011. Theses under a collaborative partnership agreement (Doctorate in Transfer to Society) with other organisations (companies or institutions). For theses that lead to the award of a Deusto doctorate degree in Transfer to Society, according to the regulations of the University of Deusto (Agreement 6/2016 of 13 December, BOUD 64). Applicants for these grants may choose to present their own thesis proposals which, among other requirements, must be defined in collaboration with an external entity, and provide the identification of the contact person as such on their application form.
